

Baltimore Woods
Nature Center
Nature in your hands

Create-A-Creature

Adaptations, or the tools that animals use to survive, are often times also what makes an animal special. Some animals are adapted to be certain colors, like the monarch butterfly, whose bright orange wings tell predators “Don’t eat me! I am poisonous!” Other animals are adapted to have incredible strengths, such as the peregrine falcon who has amazing eyesight so they can see prey while flying in the air. Below, answer the questions and draw a creature, any creature! It can be real or imaginary. Remember, all living things need five things to survive: water, food, shelter, space, and air. Be sure to share your creature with us at connect@baltimorewoods.org!

Where does it live?

What tool is on its body that helps it eat and breathe? Does it have eyes? Does it move?

What special adaptations, like camouflage, does it have?
